FIVE TO PASS ON DEBTS OF ALLIED NATIONS

The terms and conditions under which Europe will undertake to repay the United States the $11,000,000,000 borrowed during the war period will be determined by a commission of five men appointed by the president.

This became assured Friday, when, in the face of overwhelming congressional opposition, the administration decided to accept defeat on the Penrose bill, which would have concentrated power of settlement in the secretary of the treasury alone.

After a conference at the White House, President Harding informed Republican Leader Mondell that the administration would agree to the permanent discard of the Penrose bill, and would get behind the new bill to be brought out by the House ways and means committee. The new measure will empower the president to appoint a commission of five, the chairman of which is to be secretary of the treasury, to arrange the terms of settlement. The executive will not be limited in his selection except in the case of the treasury head.

President Harding informed Mondell of the administration's desire that the new bill be rushed to completion, reported out and passed on as soon as possible. Consequently, the House ways and means committee was at the job early Friday.

President Harding is anxious for the passage of the bill before November 11, when the armament and War East conference meets in Washington on that date, he wants the administration to be in a position to arrange settlement of the allied indebtedness if consideration of this question is forced upon the United States by the allied statesmen.

While both President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes believe it would be a mistake for the conference to become embroiled over the debt question, they nevertheless regard the introduction of the issue a possibility, and they want to be prepared for it if it comes.

A HOPEFUL FLIGHT

The Wall Street Journal, in a recent issue, published a very interesting and instructive article on the boll weevil situation throughout the South. We reproduce it for the benefit of the farmers of this county:

With moderate help and good advice the grasshopper was checked, and finally conquered. The boll weevil is not beyond our strength. That the present cotton crop is about half the size of that of last year is a certainty. In a large measure this is the result of the boll weevil's depredations. As cotton production is the principal industry of the South, and the insect now covers the whole producing region, there is no exaggeration in saying that the weevil presents one of the greatest economic problems. The invasion calls for a prompt and vigorous defense.

Leading men of the South recognize the fact that there is still danger of small farmers yielding to panic and leaving the land, or perhaps being stampeded into devoting their whole time and resources to new and untried crops. Reasonable diversification will be necessary, and is desirable. Indeed, one great assurance of the South today is the fact that this year it raised unusual crops of food and feedstuffs. But cotton must always be the great surplus crop of the South, raised on a smaller acreage with a larger yield per acre.

This means that the Southern farmers must adopt toward the weevil the slogan of the soldiers in France—"Treat 'em rough!" There is much that can be done now. Ecologists who have had experience with weevil say that if the stalks are destroyed as soon as possible after picking millions of the insects will be killed, which otherwise would breed next year. The reason is that the insect feeds on nothing but the cotton plant. Deprive it of its food and it must die.

Dr. W. D. Hunter, of the United States Bureau of Entomology, is authority for the statement that even after killing frosts weevils are active, so that they may be destroyed in this way until the weather gets so cold that they must hibernate. This statement should be sufficient to send the farmers through every cotton field to destroy every vestige of weevil food.

Then comes the question of winter shelter and cover. Possessing the power of adapting itself to climatic changes, the weevil has marched northward as it gradually became acclimated, so that it can stand any climate cotton can stand. All it needs is a little covering in the winter. Farmers can meet it here by cleaning up and burning all trash in the fields, clearing around stumps and fences and burning over the banks of ditches, and not permitting haystacks to remain near the cotton fields.

That there will be weevils next year is certain, but by destroying their food and shelter now the numbers can be materially lessened. The monuments scattered so thickly through the South are mute witness to the concerted, determined effort it once made to meet another invasion. Here is one, which, in money damage, is equally serious. An equal concerted and determined effort should be put forth to meet it without delay.

OBSERVE GAME LAWS

The state game warden sends the following letter to the Leader, which will be of interest to all hunters and those who are interested in the preservation of game:

"The quail season will soon open in Tipton county and I am desirous and very anxious that every sportsman observe the game laws and purchase his hunting license before he goes hunting. Heretofore the game laws have not been observed as they should have been, and the result has been that the game has been destroyed without protection.

"I am appointing deputy wardens in your county for the protection of your game and fish and this department is anxious indeed that all sportsmen co-operate with me and see that the game laws are enforced and that every hunter buys his license. Your license fund goes to this department to help defray the expenses of enforcing the law for the protection of game and fish, and the law provides that the department must live within its revenue, or in other words, they can use no fund except that derived from the sale of licenses and fines from their convictions.

"I am trying to make you a good game warden. I am a sportsman and now that a majority of the sportsmen in your county are real men and glad to assist the department all they can, and can render this department valuable service by speaking a good word for the protection of the game to your friends and neighbors and insist that they equip themselves with hunting licenses before the season opens. I am trying to enforce the laws on a high plane and I am instructing my wardens to disregard frivolous cases, but to prosecute wilful violators.

"The revenue in some counties is so small it is impossible to employ a warden at a salary until the revenue derived from the county is sufficient to justify the department to pay salaries.

"I will greatly appreciate all co-operation and the investigation of the deputies. I expect every sportsman and the citizens generally to assist me to stock every stream in Tennessee with fine fish, but before I can do so I must have the full co-operation, and the dynamiting and seining will have to be stopped.

"C. F. WILLIAMS,
"State Game Warden."

MILLIONS MAY HEAR HARDING'S ADDRESS

When President Harding pays the nation's tribute to the unknown American soldier dead at Arlington cemetery on Armistice day his voice will be heard by the greatest audience that ever listened to a single man, says Sunday's Washington Post. Not only the hushed throng that gathers at the National cemetery will hear the president's words, but as he speaks them they will be carried over thousands of miles of wire to similar hushed gatherings met to do honor to the unknown heroes of the great war in distant cities.

The number that hears the president may reach a million. In New York, Chicago and San Francisco the president's speech on the heroic dead will be made audible to the memorial assemblages.

Sound amplifiers will transmit the president's words to the audience at Arlington and long distance telephone wires, connected to similar amplifiers in other cities, will carry his message broadcast. The apparatus is now being installed by the engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, with the co-operation of the War Department, which was designated by President Harding to assist in the work. Albert E. Berry, president of the Chesapeake and Potomac telephone, submitted the plans to the president, who approved them.

The voice amplifiers which will be used were perfected by the experts of the telephone and telegraph company, and were developed for public use wherever they may be of benefit and not for commercial exploitation.

The apparatus is complicated and involves the use of the latest devices developed in the study of voice transmission by wire. The president, as he makes his speech, will be surrounded by many small transmitters, so placed as to be invisible. Through these the voice energy will be transmitted to a vacuum tube amplifier, which multiplies the sound energy. Through successive amplifiers the sound volume will be conducted until it has been magnified sufficiently to be turned loose through concealed horns.

Telephone experts will guard President Harding's words with infinite care as they are transmitted along the vast stretch of wire from Washington to San Francisco.
